Santa Clara, a sprawling suburban town in the heart of the Silicon Valley, is in love with the arts. The City is home to some of the giants of the high technology industry and also to people from dozens of countries and cultures. Santa Clara supports and cherishes the arts more than most cities its size. From ballet to modern dance, choral music to opera, and bands ranging from jazz to pop to punk, Santa Clara has it all. The City is home to two museums, a banner art exhibit, a summer concert series, a beautiful library with its own art gallery, a performing arts center, and biennial sculpture exhibitions.

Santa Clara's Cultural Commission is the sponsor of many City arts events. The eight volunteer commissioners take their mandate seriously. Their dual task is to advise the City Council on matters of cultural funding and also to help promote the arts in Santa Clara by organizing free concerts, a street dance, and art exhibits.
